When That Which is Perfect has Come

*For darkness is waning and morning is nigh,
No longer do childish things satisfy.*

*The things which once thrilled my childish delight
Have all taken wing and fled with the night.*

*The call for attention, the need to be right,
Impatience, revenge, hatred and spite,
The love of possessions, of family and home
Have all given way to His Life alone.*

*The need to love and be loved have all gone,
Self has given way — my thoughts sing a new song
Of mature relations where death has no sting,
Where those of like vision together can sing,
“Farewell to all glory of Earth, pomp and fun,
His LOVE — that which is PERFECT has COME.”*

*Marie Kolasinski
1984*
